I receive paranormal type calls on my paranormal hotline. Some of the calls are mediocre in nature, a deceased relative passed away and is now haunting the house. The deceased relative is usually bothering the client in some way or another and they want that deceased relative to leave the house. I usually take care of the calls and explain to the client on how to bless their home and send that pesky relative to the light. There are those few rare calls that really get my attention and this is one of them. The client's name is KiLee Harris from the state of Maine. KiLee in 2011 stayed at the Mount Washington Hotel. KiLee experienced some very odd paranormal activity at this hotel. But before we get into KiLee's story, let me give you a bit of history on this hotel.

FROM WIKIPEDIA

The Mount Washington Hotel was constructed between 1900 and 1902 at a cost of $1.7 million (approximately $64 million today) by Joseph Stickney, a native of Concord, New Hampshire who had made a fortune before the age of 30 as a coal broker in Pennsylvania. In 1881 Stickney and his partner, John N. Conyngham, had purchased the nearby Mount Pleasant Hotel (a large early hotel demolished in 1939) from lumberman John T.G. Leavitt.[4] Subsequently, Stickney began work on his Mount Washington Hotel. He had envisioned the hotel to be a luxurious getaway for urban dwellers looking to escape the city. There is a popular urban legend that the Mount Washington Hotel served as inspiration for the Overlook Hotel in Stephen King's novel The Shining (1977) and the subsequent film adaptation. King is a native of nearby Maine and has set several of his novels in New Hampshire. Regardless, King and the Mount Washington Hotel themselves have discredited this legend, with King stating the hotel was based on The Stanley Hotel in Estes Park, Colorado.

END OF WIKIPEDIA

The Omni Mount Washington Resort & Spa is located in Bretton Woods, New Hampshire. If you ever want to visit this gorgeous hotel, the address is: 310 Mount Washington Hotel Rd, Bretton Woods, NH 03575. It's part of the Bretton Woods Ski Area. I learn that the Omni Mount Washington Resort is considered a haunted place, with reports of paranormal activity. The famous ghost of this hotel is Carolyn Foster Stickney. Carolyn was the wife of the hotel's founder. Carolyn's apparition is seen all over the hotel. The one room that Carolyn frequents the most is Room 314. She loves to sit on the edge of the bed. Another ghost that hangs out at the hotel is Charles Cook, the hotel's caretaker, who is believed to linger in the stables. Charles is known to sometimes look at a guest for a few minutes, smile and then vanish. One client says that his stare makes them feel uncomfortable and then he vanishes and that can be scary.

Now back to the ghost known as Caroline Foster Stickney. She is also known as the Princess. The staff members gave her that name. Long time resident Caroline became known as "The Princess" after marrying a French royal named Jean Baptiste Marie de Faucigny Lucinge. Princess Caroline Foster's ties to the resort go back to its inception, when her first husband, railroad tycoon Joseph Stickney, built the grand resort in 1902. Caroline loved the hotel and especially loved the resort. Caroline had her own "Princess Room" that included an indoor swimming pool and a private dining room. The regal Caroline is sighted by many tourists and guests. Guests have described her as being elegant in her mannerisms. She is often seen in a Victorian dress gliding down the hallways. Caroline likes to cause small disturbances like tapping on doors, only for the guest to discover that there is no one outside of the door. The guest will usually think..."it must be Caroline playing her games." Objects within the guestrooms will also suddenly disappear and then reappear in the exact place they were lost. The hauntings at Omni Mount Washington are legendary. Many ghost hunting groups enjoy exploring this famous hotel.

KiLee tells me that guests have complained about lights turning on and off on their own, as well as items disappearing and reappearing in strange locations. Other guests report smelling a floral perfume in the middle of the night. KiLee says that she has talked with guests that heard music coming from the ballroom and they were able to see ghostly apparitions dancing and then fading away. KiLee says she didn't experience any of this. KiLee says her experience was different from everyone else. KiLee claims she saw two twin girls staring at her from the end of the hallway. The very same twin girls from the movie The Shining. KiLee says..."you know the Mount Washington Hotel was the inspiration for Stephen King's The Shining?" I had to correct KiLee and explain to her the hotel inspiration for The Shining was actually two hotels. They were The Stanley Hotel in Estes Park, Colorado and Timberline Lodge in Mount Hood, Oregon. After KiLee did her own research, she saw that I was correct. KiLee believed that Stephen King did not want to give credit to the Mount Washington Hotel. I explained to KiLee she probably encountered a Tulpa. KiLee believed so hard that the Mount Washington Hotel was the inspiration for

The Shining, that she projected the image of the two twins from the movie. I also explained to KiLee a famous case of a Tulpa. The author Walter B. Gibson who created the character The Shadow, thought of his creation so much that he projected the Shadow with his mind. Friends and family who visited Gibson saw a man dressed in all black clothing with a red scarf around his mouth appear in Gibson's home. This character had a very long nose and wore a black fedora hat. Gibson's family and friends were describing The Shadow! This entity was projected from Gibson's mind. Other people throughout history have projected energy images from their mind. There have been people who have projected the image of Slenderman, a fictional internet creation. If you believe in something hard enough, it may actually come alive from your thoughts. I asked KiLee has she ever seen the twins again and her answer is no. KiLee believes that she had created a Tulpa, because before she visited the hotel, she thought of the creepy twins from the movie a lot. KiLee says it all makes sense now. It was bugging her for a long time and decided it was time for answers and gave me a call inquiring about her strange experience.

Screams of Torment: Kings Park Psychiatric Center

Paul Dale Roberts, HPI's Esoteric Detective

Halo Paranormal Investigations

Kings Park Psychiatric Center has to be one of the most haunted buildings in America. I actually knew a soldier that was admitted to this center for a period of 7 days. I will call this soldier "Corporal". Corporal was a hard-stripe corporal that served in the Vietnam War. Corporal had some bad episodes from his PTSD. In 1974, the Corporal went into this center to be treated. Kings Park Psychiatric Center was established in 1885. Kings Park Psychiatric Center was originally constructed to be a beacon of hope for mental healthcare. Their goal was to avoid overcrowding and deplorable conditions of various institutions during that time period. The Center went from a "beacon of hope" to falling into the same disastrous situations as other institutions. At its height in 1953, the facility was home to 9,303 patients. Abandoned was the idea of rest and relaxation for the mentally ill. The patients found themselves as victims to more dramatic procedures such as lobotomies and electro-shock therapy. The Center became a living "Hell on Earth".

One of the most diabolical doctors at this Center was Dr. David John Impastato. He was an American neuropsychiatrist who pioneered the use of electroconvulsive therapy (ECT) in the United States. A treatment for mental illness initially called "electroshock," ECT was developed in 1937 by Dr. Ugo Cerletti and Lucio Bini, while working in Rome. Impastato has been credited with the earliest documented use of the revolutionary method in North America, administered in early 1940 to a schizophrenic female patient in New York City. In 1988, a patient heard screaming coming from one of the rooms. When the patient went to investigate, he saw the deceased Dr. David John Impastato applying electro-shock on a ghostly patient. According to the Corporal, many patients were familiar with this story and claim that they have seen the full body apparition of Dr. Impastato. Dr. Impastato is known to walk down a hallway and looking into various rooms. He is usually seen with a sinister grin on his face.

A good number of patients have reported ghost sightings, seeing full body apparitions, hearing disembodied voices, and experiencing strange phenomena within the grounds. The Corporal witnessed paranormal activity at the Center and heard blood curdling screams, the sounds of chains rattling. The Corporal heard from other patients that sometimes they hear pounding on the walls, seeing doors opening and closing by themselves. According to the Corporal the most-scariest entity in the Center is the "Tongue Devil". The Tongue Devil is described as having a dangling long tongue, bug eyes, hunched over when he walks. If the Tongue Devil touches you, the touch is somewhat painful. The area where the Tongue Devil touched you will develop an open pus sore or blister. Some patients believe the Tongue Devil was a former patient that was tortured to death. Large dark humanoid shadows have been seen moving along the walls and lights going out, when the dark figures appear.

Locals have also spotted ghosts through the windows of multiple buildings on the old campus and have reported hearing the screams of patients who died there. The chattering and grinding of teeth have also been heard, and it is not uncommon to hear tales of strange phenomena from those who have broken into the site. By the year 2000, a portion of the Kings Park Psychiatric Center was turned into Nissequogue River State Park. Since the grounds were turned over to the New York State Office of Parks, Recreation, and Historic Preservation, the land itself became legally protected from residential and commercial redevelopment. The Kings Park Psychiatric Center operated from 1885 until 1996, when the State of New York closed the facility, releasing its few remaining patients or transferring them to the still-operational Pilgrim Psychiatric Center. Ghost hunters and paranormal enthusiasts that have snuck onto the property have gathered numerous EVPs of disembodied voices talking. Some EVPs you can hear unearthly screams. One investigator who does not want to be named, because they do not want to get in trouble for being on the grounds says that she got scratched up pretty bad from an unknown entity. The investigator has vowed never to return to this Center.

Friendly Haunting at Loretto Chapel

Paul Dale Roberts, HPI's Esoteric Detective
Halo Paranormal Investigations

I first heard of Loretto Chapel from my uncle George Roberts who was a farmer and carpenter. George made the trip to New Mexico to see what he considered the Eighth Wonder of the World. The Loretto Chapel's Miraculous Stair. I can say George was obsessed with how the staircase was constructed. George had to go see the staircase for himself. George said that when he saw the staircase, he felt an inner peace. George believed that the staircase was truly divine. The story of the Miraculous Staircase at Loretto Chapel in Santa Fe is a story based on faith, mystery, and a divine intervention. The chapel was completed in 1878, but the choir loft was 20 feet high and remained inaccessible without a staircase. The nuns of the chapel prayed to Saint Joseph, the patron saint of carpenters for nine straight days. The nuns conducted a novena, which is a series of prayers repeated for nine consecutive days. On the tenth day, a mysterious carpenter appeared and told the nuns that he will build the staircase. Legend has it that the staircase was built overnight, while others say it took several days. It depends on who you want to believe. This mysterious carpenter after building the staircase just disappeared. The nuns searched for the carpenter everywhere and they could not locate him. They wanted to pay the carpenter and thank him personally. Since the nuns were praying to Saint Joseph, they believed it was Saint Joseph that answered their prayers and built the staircase.

I recently talked with some ghosthunters in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Talked with Markee Z - lead investigator and Lara Twilight - Psychic Medium. They belong to the ghost hunting group called G.O.A.T. IT (Ghosts, Occult, Aerial Phenomena, Tulpas & Cryptids) Investigation Team. Markee Z says that the Loretto Chapel is now a museum and wedding chapel. The chapel was completed in 1878. Markee Z tells me that the chapel is haunted. Out of curiosity, I asked: "What, by angels?"

Markee Z laughs and says..."well maybe, but it does have a prominent ghost". Lara Twilight says that the legendary ghost, is a ghost known as "Sister George". Reports of paranormal activity include sightings of her, as well as instances of her allegedly slipping extra money into the gift shop register. Lara as a psychic medium felt her presence and captured an EVP of a woman saying..."love people, never judge". Lara did some research on Sister George, and it is rumored that she died from a fall in the building. Sister George is also known as the Smoking Nun because when she was alive, she smoked cigars. Before she makes her appearance, the soon-to-be witness will smell cigar smoke. There are anecdotes of Sister George allegedly slipping extra money into the gift shop register, a gesture that is interpreted as her lingering presence. Some stories mention Sister George interacting with children, perhaps reflecting her former role as a teacher at the school connected to the chapel. Some children have reported being hugged by an unseen entity. Beyond Sister George, there have been various reports of other unexplained phenomena within the Loretto Chapel, including unexplained noises and disturbances.

Markee Z says that the mysterious carpenter is something right out of the Bible, because when he met with the nuns he had with him a donkey and toolbox. When he was done with the staircase, he just vanished, took no pay or even received a "thank you" from the nuns. The staircase is considered a miracle because it has two 360-degree turns and no visible support, with some believing it was built without nails, only wooden pegs. The carpenter's identity remains a mystery, with some believing he was St. Joseph himself. I explain to Markee Z that my theory is that the nuns were visited by an angel, that used advanced technology to build that staircase. The technology would be extraterrestrial technology. If you believe angels are from heaven, that would mean that they were not born on Earth, that they are not terrestrial, they are indeed extraterrestrial. With advanced extraterrestrial technology, the staircase would be easy to build. The nuns with their nine days of prayer may have connected with angels. Prayer is often seen as a way to communicate with a higher power, whether it be God, a deity like an angel, or a universal consciousness. This connection can bring a sense of spiritual alignment and a feeling of being heard and understood. If angels are aliens, it would make sense that you would be able to contact them through prayer. A UFO witness once said that he saw a UFO in the sky. He received a telepathic message that said..."would you like to come with us?" The UFO witness said a flat "no". It would appear that angels and aliens communicate the same way, with telepathy. When the nuns prayed for nine days, their prayers were heard by an angel.

Spooky Things Happen at Mount Rainier, WA

Paul Dale Roberts, HPI's Esoteric Detective
Halo Paranormal Investigations

When I went to Seattle, Washington, I took the tour of the Seattle Underground, hoping to run into some ghosts. The Seattle Underground is widely known for being haunted, with numerous ghost stories and tour guides claiming to encounter paranormal activity. The tunnels, which were once the heart of downtown Seattle, are believed to be inhabited by the spirits of those who once lived and worked there. I learned the Seattle Underground's history is intertwined with tales of violence, fire, and the spirits of those who never left. Many visitors and tour guides report seeing strange figures, hearing unexplained noises, and experiencing eerie sensations within the tunnels. One lady in front of me claimed that her hair was being tugged on. She first thought I did it and I looked at her and said..."wasn't me!" Certain areas within the Underground, like the old bank vault and a former brothel, are particularly known for paranormal activity. A popular story told by the tour guide is that a bank teller was killed in a shootout and his ghost is seen walking around the Underground. The "Banker Ghost" is also seen looking at his pocket watch. Then you have the spirits of sex workers who frequented the tunnels. A psychic from Seattle claims she has talked to the spirit of a sex worker known as Darling Dash. The psychic says that Darling Dash does not remember how she died. The tour was interesting and unfortunately, I did not experience any paranormal activity. My last stop was the Seattle Space Needle and then it was time to go home.

When I was flying back home, the Captain said if we look out the left side window, we could see Mount Rainier. Mount Rainier looked so majestic and magical. I only wish I had more time to explore the state of Washington. Little did I know, I would be assisting a Washington Fish and Wildlife Enforcement Officer. I am retired from the California Department of Fish and Wildlife and one of my jobs at Fish and Wildlife is being a "Custodian of Records". I was contacted by a Washington Enforcement Officer that needed records on a hunter that was known to hunt in California and the State of Washington. The hunter had broken numerous laws and was now being sought out. As I was helping this Officer, I discussed my trip to Seattle. I disclosed to the Officer that I was a paranormal investigator and wanted to investigate the paranormal activity at Mount Rainier. The Officer told me he has heard so many crazy stories from fisherman, hunters, campers, hikers at Mount Rainier. Here are some of the stories the Officer told me. I am not going to disclose the Officer's name, as I don't wish for any problems for said Officer.

The Officer talked with a hunter who made claim, that two years ago, when he was hunting, he saw at a distance of 300 yards a "grey" type of alien and behind the alien stood a Bigfoot. The alien and Bigfoot stared at the hunter for a few seconds and then scampered off. The hunter was scared to death and hiked back to his vehicle, but before he reached his vehicle, he saw a huge nest near a tree. 3 days later, the hunter brought 3 of his friends to the location, so he could show them the nest. When they arrived at the site, the nest was gone and his friends thought he was making up the story. The hunter felt comfortable in telling the Officer the story, because another hunter had recently told the Officer about seeing a glimpse of what he thought was Bigfoot.

MOUNT RAINIER GOATMAN?

The last story the Officer told me is that a hiker made claim that in June of 1998 he came across a cryptid crossing the hiking trail and the cryptid had the head of a goat, bipedal and had cloven hoofs. The fur on this cryptid was dull white and some black patches on the face of the creature. The Officer assured me that the hiker was not drinking when he told the Officer the story.

Mount Rainier is known for several paranormal occurrences, including ghostly footsteps on the Camp Muir Trail, the legend of Tahoma, the spirit of the mountain, and of course UFO sightings. The stories below have been collected by many people from the State of Washington and elsewhere. Let's go over some of the legends.

CAMP MUIR TRAIL AND THE LEGEND OF TAHOMA

Camp Muir is rumored to be haunted by the spirit of Tahoma, who is said to consume explorers and trap them in a cave-like stomach. Hikers have reported hearing ghostly footsteps, which disappear when they turn to look. The Nisqually tribe's legend says Tahoma is the spirit of Mount Rainier, and she is believed to be a potential threat to mountaineers.

FAMOUS UFO SIGHTING

In 1947, Kenneth Arnold, a private pilot, claimed to have seen nine unidentified flying objects near Mount Rainier, sparking the modern fascination with UFOs and leading to the popularization of the term "flying saucer". Arnold's sighting, which involved objects described as "flying like a saucer would," was widely reported and fueled a wave of other UFO sightings across the United States. Washington state has the second-most UFO sightings in the U.S., with over 7,000 reported sightings, according to an Auburn Reporter article.

ELEVEN GHOSTLY CLIMBERS

Mount Rainier is known for various paranormal activity reports, including ghostly encounters and mysterious phenomena. The most well-known is the 1981 avalanche on the Ingraham Glacier that killed 11 climbers, with some reporting voices and strange shapes seen on the glacier around the anniversary of the event. Other reports include ghostly figures, whispers, and a feeling of being watched, particularly at the Paradise Inn. Additionally, there are stories of a ghostly cloud at Reflection Lake and a hooded figure seen near the treeline, causing intense fear in those who witnessed it.

THE GHOSTS OF PARADISE INN THE INTELLIGENT WATCHFUL CLOUD & THE HOODED FIGURE

Some believe the ghosts of those who lost their lives on Mount Rainier reside at the Paradise Inn, where guests report feelings of being watched and unusual noises. After the 1981 avalanche, some hikers have reported hearing voices and seeing strange shapes glinting off the sun on the Ingraham Glacier, especially near the anniversary of the event. A story on Fodors Travel Guide describes a low, shimmery cloud that moved with them, with no sound, and the feeling of being watched.

A Reddit user posted about taking a picture of a Hooded Figure near the treeline, which caused them and their friend to feel ill, scared, and have vivid dreams afterward. There are also stories of strange noises, a feeling of being watched, and other unexplained phenomena occurring in various parts of the park.

MISSING AND STRANGE DISAPPEARANCES

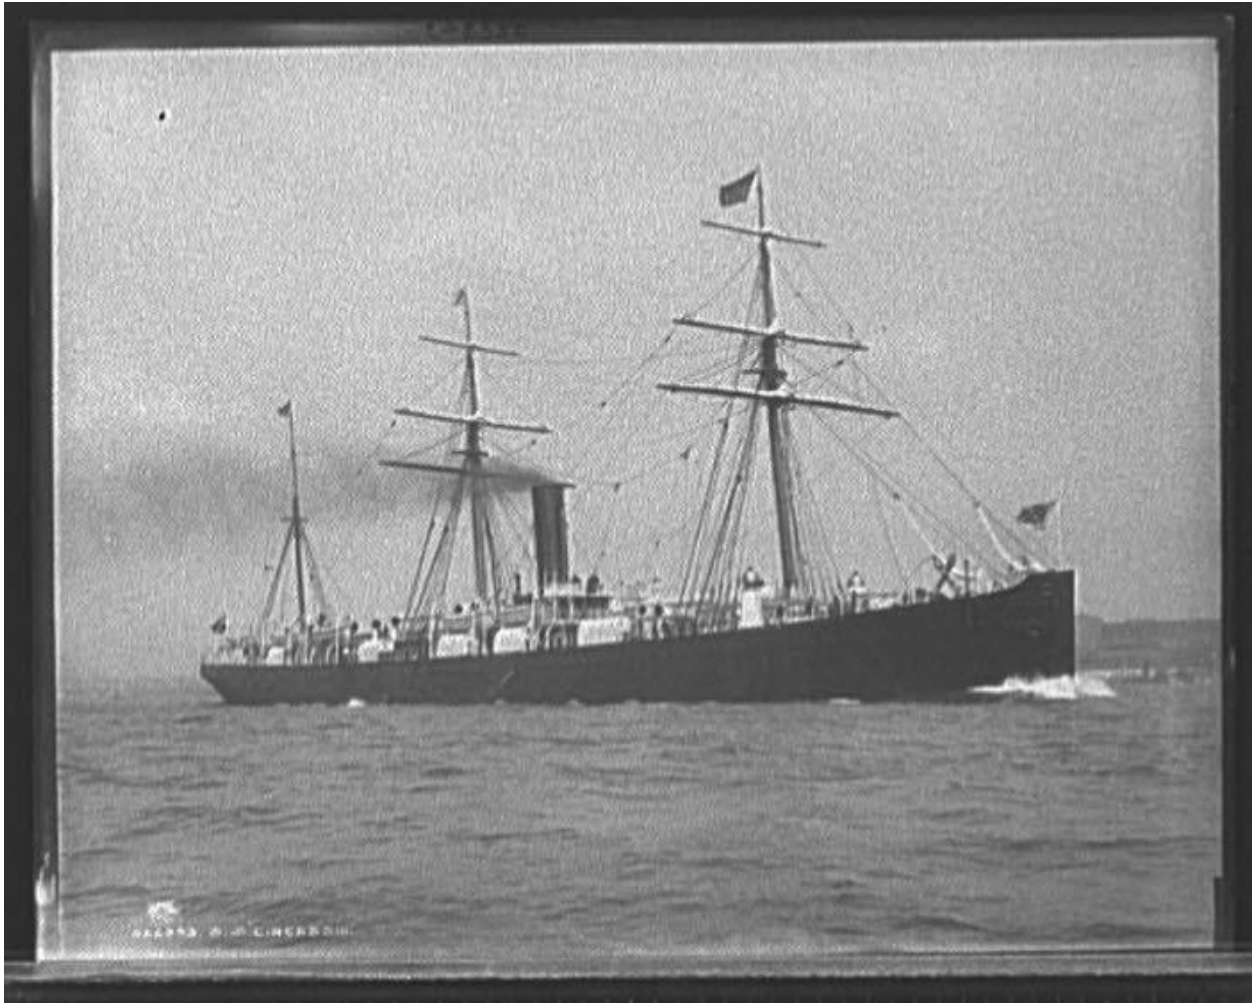

At least 400 people have gone missing in Mount Rainier National Park since 1989, and their disappearances remain unsolved. This number includes cases where remains have been found, but the cause of death or disappearance remains unclear.

In Search of the Honey Island Swamp Monster

Paul Dale Roberts, HPI's Esoteric Detective

Halo Paranormal Investigations

PAUL'S EBOOKS:

jazmaonline.boards.net/thread/3222/pauls-books

The Honey Island Swamp Monster has a multitude of nicknames. The people of Louisiana call this creature the Cajun Sasquatch or the Louisiana Wookiee. Some will just call this cryptid The Thing. The Honey Island Swamp Monster is seen mostly in the St. Tammany Parish area of Louisiana. Specialist Nicholas Highwalker who was stationed at Fort Polk, Louisiana claimed that in 1984 he heard a loud scream on the land near and around Fort Polk. Nicholas surveyed the land with his binoculars and saw the strangest sight. He believes he saw a Bigfoot type of creature chasing a dog looking creature. Nicholas says that it happened so fast and then they were both gone. In later years, Nicholas believes he may have seen the Honey Island Swamp Monster chasing a Rougarou. Special Note: a Rougarou is a Louisiana cryptid that looks like a werewolf. The description of the Honey Island Swamp Monster is that it has a gray coat of thick fur. It has yellow eyes and is about 7 feet tall, bipedal with webbed feet. Legend has it that if you smell a putrid odor, the Honey Island Swamp Monster is nearby. Marty Boulanger of Florida, an avid hunter that enjoys hunting in Florida and Louisiana, claims that the Honey Island Swamp Monster has the same putrid odor as the Florida Skunk Ape. Marty claims that he has smelled both cryptids during his hunts.

In 1974, Harlan Ford, a retired air traffic controller took up wildlife photography in his spare time and while out photographing wildlife came upon some large footprints. The footprints displayed 4 toes on each foot. Harlan made some plaster casts of the footprints. Harlan and his friend Billy Mills came across more footprints and followed the footprints to a dead wild boar with his throat slashed. Harlan believes this was the work of the Honey Island Swamp Monster. Super 8 Film that Harlan took of the footprints and dead boar was discovered after Harlan's passing. Some people theorize that a traveling circus had some escaped chimpanzees that ran off into the Louisiana swamps. Most locals do not believe that story, because the Honey Island Swamp Monster is known to be 7 feet tall. Chimpanzees are known to be 3 feet to 5.5 feet in height. Daniel Richelieu of Shreveport, Louisiana claims that in 1992 while hunting, he saw a large black orb floating through the woods. The orb was the size of 2 basketballs. The orb was shimmering like it was made of water and then collapsed like water, displaying a Bigfoot type of creature that scampered into the woods.

HIGH STRANGENESS AT THE APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

Paul Dale Roberts, HPI's Esoteric Detective
Halo Paranormal Investigations
jazmaonline.boards.net/

The Appalachian Mountains are often associated with various paranormal phenomena, including sightings of cryptids like Sasquatch and the Mothman. There are plenty of ghostly apparitions that have been seen on the trails. Historic entities like Bell Witch are part of the legend of the Appalachian Mountains. Locals believe the ancient landscape and rich folklore contribute to these stories. Here's a more detailed look at some of the paranormal activity reported in the Appalachians, starting off with the cryptids:

CRYPTIDS SIGHTED AT THE APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

WAMPUS CAT

The Wampus Cat has been sighted in the Appalachian Mountains several times by hunters and hikers. People in their campsites have heard the Wampus Cat whining during the night. Legend has it that the cat has green piercing eyes and has psychic powers. In 1951, folklorist Vance Randolph described the Wampus cat as "a kind of amphibious panther which leaps into the water and swims like a colossal mink". This cryptid has been blamed for killing livestock during the 1930s in the Piedmont of North Carolina. There has not been in recent sightings of this mysterious cat.

FLATWOODS MONSTER

The Flatwoods Monster is a legendary cryptid from West Virginia, reported to have been seen near the town of Flatwoods on September 12, 1952. A group of children and adults reported seeing a 10-foot-tall creature with a spade-shaped head, glowing eyes, and a metallic odor after a bright light streaked across the sky. The witnesses also described that the creature had small claw-like hands. Project Bluebook investigated this sighting. Some locals believe the story and some locals believe the story is a hoax. There has been no more sightings of the Flatwoods Monster. The legendary cryptid does draw in tourists. There is even a museum dedicated to this cryptid.

SASQUATCH

The Appalachian Mountains are frequently cited as a hotspot for Sasquatch sightings, with reports spanning across multiple states like Tennessee, Kentucky, Virginia, and West Virginia. These accounts often describe a large, ape-like creature with various fur colors, including some with black fur and glowing green eyes. Some eyewitnesses have even described Sasquatch as having a powerful build and being over eight feet tall. The Appalachian Mountains have a long history of legends and folklore, including stories of hairy covered wild men, wooly boogers, and ape-like creatures, adding to the mystique surrounding Sasquatch. Sightings of Sasquatch continues to the present day. When I was stationed at Fort Knox, Kentucky, I visited the Cumberland Plateau, which is part of the Appalachian Mountains and viewed the highest point in Kentucky, Big Black Mountain. I met some locals who were moonshiners, and they had many stories about Sasquatch roaming around Big Black Mountain. One moonshiner told me that his friend's cabin was broken into, and everything was topsy turvy inside the cabin. It was reported that a Sasquatch broke into the cabin looking for food. The Sasquatch that broke into the cabin was known as the Big Black Mountain Boogie Man.

GHOSTS AT THE APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

Some claim to have seen ghosts and apparitions in the mountains, often tied to specific locations or historical events. Some of the notable ghosts that haunt the Appalachian Mountains are The Phantom Hiker of Grandfather Mountain. This legend involves a massive, black dog with glowing red eyes that is said to lurk on the mountain. It's believed to be a supernatural creature that attacks hikers, especially at night. Then there is the Greenbrier Ghost. The Greenbrier Ghost is based on a real-life murder case in West Virginia in the 1890s. The ghost is said to be the spirit of Elva Zona Heaster, a young woman who was found dead under mysterious circumstances. The Ghost of Lucy is usually seen at the Roaring Fork Motor Nature Trail. The Ghost of Lucy is believed to be a woman that got lost on the trail in the Smoky Mountains, and to this day, she is still looking for her way home.

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAIN SKINWALKERS

The Skinwalker is a creature from Navajo folklore that is believed to have a connection to the Appalachian Mountains, with some stories suggesting it has been seen in the area. My own opinion is that as a specific figure from Navajo culture, it is unlikely to be found in the Appalachians. Skinwalkers, in Navajo mythology, are described as dangerous witches capable of shapeshifting into animals and using dark magic. With my research, I was unable to find any reports of sightings of a Skinwalker in the Appalachian Mountains.

THE NOTORIOUS BELL WITCH

The story of the Bell Witch is one of the most well-known paranormal legends in the Appalachians. It's a tale of a mischievous spirit who tormented a family in Tennessee, with reports of strange noises, apparitions, and even physical assaults. Some paranormal enthusiasts believe that the Bell Witch is a poltergeist, while others believe it's truly a witch that is now in a ghostly form. There are some paranormal investigators that make claim they encountered the Bell Witch and even have some EVPs of the witch talking.

BROWN MOUNTAIN LIGHTS

These are unexplained lights that have been seen over the mountains, often attributed to some unknown phenomenon or even ghostly activity. Some locals believe that they are SCF (Spiritual Containment Fields) of the deceased. Spiritual Containment Fields are your so-called orbs. Locals say that the Brown Mountain Lights have intelligent movement, which makes the lights a paranormal mystery.

HAUNTED TRAILS

Some specific trails within the Appalachian Trail, like Bluff Mountain, are known for their purported haunted history. One hiker says that there is a ghost of a man that wears dark clothing that haunts the trails. The locals call this ghost "The Stalker". While a person is hiking along the trail, they will hear footsteps behind them. When you turn around, you will see a glimpse of The Stalker. The Appalachian Mountains are known for their diverse ghost stories, including the Phantom Hiker, the Moon-Eyed people, and the Wapiti Shelter's murder victims. These tales add a layer of mystery and intrigue to the already challenging Appalachian Trail. Let's take a quick look at some of the ghosts that you might encounter on these trails. There is The Phantom Hiker. The Phantom Hiker is a spectral figure, often described as an older man with a beard, seen hiking alone along the trail, especially near Grandfather Mountain. He is said to vanish into thin air, leaving hikers wondering if they truly saw a ghost. The Wapiti Shelter in Virginia is allegedly haunted by the ghosts of two murdered hikers, with reports of screaming at night. Camping Area between the Second and Third Saddleback in Maine, you will feel a solid pressure around the head of your tent, which is thought of as a spectral presence. At the Brown Fork Gap Shelter in North Carolina, a hiker reported hearing the distinct sound of someone hiking through snow, without seeing anyone.

MISSING PEOPLE AND PORTALS

Several notable people have gone missing in the Appalachian Mountains, particularly within the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, leaving these cases unsolved for decades. These include Pauline Melton, Trenny Gibson, and Dennis Martin, who vanished without a trace under different circumstances. Additionally, Geraldine Largay, an experienced hiker, disappeared on the Appalachian Trail.

Notable Cases:

Dennis Martin: Vanished during a family picnic in the Great Smoky Mountains in 1969 while playing hide-and-seek. Despite extensive searches, he was never found. Trenny Gibson: Disappeared on a school trip to the Great Smoky Mountains in 1976. She was last seen hiking with her group and was never located. Geraldine Largay: An experienced hiker vanished from the Appalachian Trail in Maine in 2013. Her body was found 26 days later, but the circumstances of her disappearance remain unclear. Pauline Melton: One of the five missing persons cases from the Great Smoky Mountains National Park. Her case, along with others, is still listed on the National Park Service's website.

Special Note: Some locals believe there are portals in and around the Appalachian Mountains.

Case example: The Appalachian Trail, which runs along the mountains, is sometimes referred to as a "sacred portal" or a "gateway to nature" by those who experience it. Diane Mason from West Virginia was hiking on the Appalachian trail and felt a disturbance in the air. Diane felt dizzy and when she placed her hand and arm in one area of the trail, everything felt thick and tingling. Diane feels she came upon a portal. Diane turned back from the portal and headed back to her vehicle. Diane felt if she went into the portal, she would never get out.

RAVEN MOCKER

The "Raven Mocker" is a creature from Cherokee mythology, often described as a witch or evil spirit, particularly in the Appalachian region. It's said to prolong its life by preying on the sick and dying, sometimes depicted as a withered, aged figure with a raven's call. The Raven Mocker is also associated with shapeshifting, as seen in the Mountain Monsters episode "Bigfoot of Lee County: Raven Mocker". Raven Mockers are also associated with cannibalism. They are known to eat their victims.

MOTHMAN

Mothman is a winged cryptid associated with the town of Point Pleasant, West Virginia, known for its alleged sightings that began in the 1960s. It is described as a large, humanoid figure with wings and glowing red eyes, often seen gliding through the air. The creature is said to have been responsible for various strange sightings and events, including lurking outside homes and chasing cars. Mothman has been sighted not only in Point Pleasant, West Virginia, but the cryptid has been seen in Sacramento, California; Chicago and Chernobyl, Ukraine. Mothman is reputed as being a Harbinger of Doom.

UFOS/UAPS

UFOs/UAPs have been seen around all areas of the Appalachian Mountains. Most notable is the Flatwoods Monster, Mothman and the Moon-Eyed People. Danny Ledgmar from Louisville, Kentucky witnessed a boomerang shaped UFO flying by Big Black Mountain. The boomerang UFO phased out and simply vanished. Danny believes it was a cloaking device that made the UFO invisible. Special Note: I believe that Mothman and the Moon-Eyed People are either extraterrestrial or interdimensional.

MOONEYED PEOPLE

The "moon-eyed people" are a legendary group in Cherokee folklore, described as short, white-skinned, and blue-eyed beings who lived in Appalachia before the Cherokee arrived. The Cherokee called them "moon-eyed" because they supposedly saw poorly during the day and were more active at night, possibly due to a sensitivity to sunlight. The Cherokee tradition states they were eventually displaced or driven underground.

A large stone sculpture of a howling wolf sits on a rocky base in the foreground. In the background, the Great Wolf Lodge hotel is visible, featuring a sign that reads "GREAT WOLF LODGE" and an American flag flying on a tall pole. The hotel has multiple stories with many windows and a covered entrance area. A few people are standing near the wolf sculpture.

Blood Money House of Lehigh, Oklahoma

Let me introduce you to my late grandmother, her name is Sophie (Valtille) Roberts aka the Angry French Woman. I never knew how she acquired her nickname, and my father never told me. The only thing I can imagine is that she was angry all the time and cussing people out in French, her native tongue. Sophie married Emile Roberts (my grandfather) and they settled in Lehigh, Oklahoma and moved into a farmhouse and raised cows, chickens, pigs. The house that they lived in had a strange history. The local sheriff of the town was arrested for the murder of a well-to-do local. The motive for the killing was for the money. With the blood money the crooked sheriff acquired, he built a home with that blood money. The home that my grandmother Sophie and grandfather Emile lived in with their children. Sophie and Emile had 3 children, my father Paul Marceau Roberts, my aunt Yvonne (Leaird) Roberts and my uncle George Roberts. On this farm, the Roberts family kept very busy attending to their farm animals and their crops. In fact, my father at the age of 12 years old, was flying dust croppers. Lehigh, Oklahoma has a very dark history. At one point of time, the KKK would hold rallies in this town. It was known that gangster Pretty Boy Floyd would sometimes hideout in Lehigh, Oklahoma. The main job that at one time you could get instantly, is the job of a coalminer. The landscape of Lehigh is very strange. As you walk on these green hills, you will come across huge holes in the ground. These holes are called "strip pits". Most of them have water inside and you can see water snakes swimming around inside the strip pits. During the coal mining heyday, many lives were lost in these mines. The miners that survived accidents in the mines, would sometimes receive serious injuries. My grandfather, my grandfather's brother, my dad and my uncle George all did some coal mining. My dad for a while even became a grave digger for miners who lost their lives working the coal mines.

My uncle George told me that the land is haunted by the coal miner spirits. Uncle George would tell me that on several occasions he has seen a dark figure of a miner standing outside at night, watching the house. When I went to Lehigh with my mom and dad, I had a very strange first night at the house. My dad went outside of the house and took me by my arms and shook me. Come to find out, I was sleep-walking. I actually got out of bed and started walking outside. When I woke up, I saw my dad's face and felt him holding my arms. My dad says to my mom..."Rose, Dale was sleep-walking!" That was the first time I ever slept walked and I was able to remember a woman in a gold flowing gown beckoning me to come outside. When I was walking outside the horses in my grandmother's stable were going crazy. I never slept walked again, my only time was at my grandmother's house. The next day was 4th of July 1963, and I was playing with my cousins Lanette, Paul, Allan and Larry Leaird and

I heard a male voice in my ear. The voice said..."you will be bit!" As I ran through the grass, I was literally eaten by chiggers aka Berry Bugs. My legs, chest and arms had tiny red marks all over. I couldn't understand why the chiggers only attacked me. My cousins were not bit. Later on in the evening, we were shooting off firecrackers. The male voice said in my ear..."watch your hands!" As I was lighting up black cat firecrackers, one stayed on the palm of my hand and blew up in my hand. I was in horrible pain and screaming. My parents ran over to me and gave me first aid. That was the end of my fun with firecrackers.

My father was a big skeptic, so when I told him I saw ghosts, he laughed. Fortunately, my uncle George was a believer of ghosts and had experienced seeing ghosts in the house. My uncle would tell me that he would hear disembodied footsteps in the house. He would see the shadowy figure outside of the house, watching the house. George also would see a floating figure of a woman outside of the house. Uncle George told me that he once saw his coffee cup move across the table. George has seen strange blue lights flash brightly in the back of the house. Cold spots are sometimes felt by George and Sophie. George told me that on 3 different occasions, he has smelled rotting flesh. George says that some of the most scariest things that occur near the house is the disembodied screaming heard in the fields. George believes that these are the screams of miners that have lost their lives. My cousin Paul became Mayor of Lehigh and during his time as Mayor, he received reports from the locals about the screams that could be heard in the fields. The locals wanted the screams to stop, but if the screams are paranormal, it's hard to make residual energy go away. The screams continue on to this day according to locals from Lehigh. George says at times he heard strange clicking sounds in the house and the horses and the dogs would go crazy with excitement. When the clicking stopped, the horses and the dog would calm down.

BIG SPRING, TEXAS OIL REFINERY FIRE

On February 18th, 2008, an explosion threatened Big Spring's future. West Texans watched in awe as the images surfaced of the Big Spring Refinery up in flames. My son Jason Randall Porter worked at this oil refinery. Jason took a series of photos of this big explosion and sent them to me. I sent the photos to George Noory of Coast-to-Coast AM. George's producer wanted to schedule Jason on the show, to talk about the explosion. Jason was told by his boss, everything must be kept confidential. Jason refused to be on the show. The producer asked if I would be on the show, I said "yes". When George Noory called, he said: "Paul Dale Roberts, are you there? Paul are you there?" I said "yes, George, I'm here." George hung up on me, because he could not hear me. The Coast-to-Coast AM webmaster published all of Jason's photos of the fire on the Coast-to-Coast AM website.

NEXT PHOTO: Photo of my mother, father and me. A bit of history.

As a little boy, I always wanted to be 4 things. They were: 1) Policeman. I got a taste of that when I worked with the US Army CID (Criminal Investigation Division) DST (Drug Suppression Team) in Germany. 2. Spy. I got a taste of that working as an Intelligence Analyst with the 501st Military Intelligence Battalion in Seoul, Korea - Yong Son Barracks. 3) Fireman. I did that in 1977, worked with the California Division of Forestry as a "firefighter" in Colfax, CA. CDF is now known as Cal-Fire. 4) Astronaut. In real life, never became an astronaut, but in a fictional world, I was one. This AI drawing was created by Phil D'Asaro.
